Academic Advising Questionnaire

Submit Online. Due July 1st.

Your answers to the online academic advising questionnaire guide us in assigning you to your faculty advisor. Plus, your faculty advisor will use your academic questionnaire for a first look at your interests and aspirations – improving their ability to give you great advice.

Each New College student is assigned a faculty advisor. You will meet with your advisor during orientation to plan the classes and academic work for your first semester at New College. This same faculty advisor will meet with you several times during the semester and evaluate your success at the end of your first semester.

The questionnaire asks what fields you are considering for your area of concentration (AOC); which qualities you look for in an advisor; what you are interested in beyond the curriculum; and what you identify as personal academic strengths and weaknesses. Recognize that you need not declare your area of concentration until you've completed four contracts.

If you indicate a preferred area of concentration, we may be able to match you with a faculty advisor in that area. For heavily subscribed AOCs such as psychology, biology, and environmental studies, it can be difficult to make an exact match. In those cases we may look to extracurricular activities or the qualities you look for in an advisor to make a good match.
